One of the best ways to look after your health is to 1 spend time outdoors. The Japanese art of 'forest bathing', shinrin-yoku, is becoming a popular way to do this. Over 2.5 million people take part each year in Japan, and it's spreading to other countries.

People don't do Shinrin-yoku to 2 — out – you can go to the gym to 3 — fit – it's about reconnecting with nature. Nowadays we don't spend enough time in nature, particularly where there are trees. According to doctor Qing Li, founder of the Forest Therapy Study Group in Japan, if you

4 — stressed, spending time in a forest will help you 5 — out and feel more relaxed, as well as lowering blood pressure, strengthening your immune system and 6 — your mood, so you feel healthier and happier.

How to forest bathe

- Find a place you like.
- Use your senses – look, listen, smell and touch.
- Stay there at least 20 minutes, ideally four hours.
- Do different activities – yoga, have a picnic, walk ...
- Enjoy the silence.

4 Read the text again and complete the sentences with one word or number.

- 1 Over 2.5 million people take part in forest bathing every year in Japan.
- 2 According to the writer, the purpose of forest bathing is to spend — near trees.
- 3 The minimum amount of time you should spend forest bathing is — minutes.
